Instrumentation

soprano, clarinet (Bb and A), 2 violins, viola, violoncello

Performance notes:

Total performance time ca. 22'

Score in C

note ends with a breath accent for clarinet; no bow change for strings

give note a slight rhythmic and dynamic stress

All glissandi should begin immediately after the first pitch is sounded; glissandi of duration greater than a quarter note are notated with an opening eighth note along with the required duration. Strings, note the distinction between glissandi that end with a bow change and those that do not.

Other performance notes are given as required in the score and/or part.

Programme note:

I first read Louise Morey Bowman's Timepieces several years ago in an anthology of Canadian women poets, and I knew immediately that one day I would set these vivid words to music. The images in these five poems, written in the early twentieth century, are very much “of their time,” and yet their emotional resonances transcend the limits of time, using clocks, sundials, and modern machinery to create a non-linear world of thought and sensation where the past meets the future in the present.

In this setting for soprano, clarinet and string quartet, the voice and clarinet complement each other, sometimes sounding together, sometimes finishing each other's thoughts; while the string quartet provides a rich and colourful commentary, often based on the sound of chimes and the patterns of clock mechanisms. The first poem introduces us to three different clocks that to me represent three stages of life: the romance of young adulthood, the playfulness and wonder of childhood, and the pride of old age. The next poem, set for voice and clarinet only, evokes the emptiness of time passed alone. An old sundial and Elizabethan sonnets—images of times past—are juxtaposed with a modern garden in the third poem, while in the fourth poem (for voice and string quartet only) the sundial marks the passage of time as another winter comes. This leads directly to the final poem—a coda of sorts—in which the timelessness of clocks and sundials is jarringly contrasted with the roar of the factory, and the “modern” rhythm of the machinery itself emerges.

Timepieces was co-commissioned by CBC Radio Music and Jason Hall, and is dedicated to the memory of Robert M. Hall.

Louise Morey Bowman
(1882-1944)

I

There are three wise clocks in the house.
In a winter night I heard them striking twelve. . . .
Answering each other,
Humanly.
The tall, ancient and beautiful clock in the hall,
In an inlaid case with the Prince of Wales' feathers,
And the quaint, painted posies in the corners of the dial,
With the painted lady above the dial
Who sits on a green bank,
Holding a white cockatoo on her hand
So gracefully,
The cold, silver notes of this Clock began. . . .
And then there broke in lustily
The hoarser, more human note of the other old Grandfather's Clock
On the upper landing. . . .
In its plain, massive case, with the little, old ship
With wee white sails,
That rocks backward and forward. . . .
Backward. . . . forward. . . .
Charming.
The eyes of generations of small, wondering children
Climbing up to nursery tea in the twilight.
And last came the slow, ghostly striking
Of a very, very old Clock, on the library mantel. . . .
A clock who has always worked very hard
And who has to be wound every evening,
And who has never been sure of a steady, aristocratic foundation
To stand on. . . .
Like the others,
But who still strikes, feebly and truthfully,
Proud to give service.
Three old clocks very wise and human. . . .
And faithful,
Striking the hours on a winter night,
With the age-old Moon looking in at the windows.

II

In a house that is suddenly left empty,
Unlighted, alone,
Through the long mystical hours of a night
An old eightday Clock strikes. . . .
Twelve. . . .
One. . . .
Two. . . .
Three. . . .
Is there anything so silent. . . . lonely. . . . vast. . . .
As a Clock striking hours in a house. . . .
With no one to listen?
Is there no one to listen?

III

The Sundial is very, very old
To be counting the hours in my modern garden,
Where flowers bloom in wild riot of colour,
And modern poets read vers libre
Under the shade of a jolly young maple tree.

I think I shall plant tall, stately white phlox
All around the Sundial
Next summer.
And try to have more spaces of green, velvet turf. . . .
And perhaps buy a peacock.

For we cannot read only Elizabethan lyrics and sonnets
Beside the sundial,
And it is so aloof and so old for my modern garden,
Although, in the sunshine, so faithful. . . .
Yes, it should have a peacock!

IV

The winter moonlight is streaming down
Into the sunken garden.
Yesterday I laid a vivid spray of red Autumn berries
Upon the sundial,
Over the calm old motto. . . .
'Light and shade by turns but Love always.'

Now the first snow has fallen, and the pale moonlight
The Sundial stands as aloof as ever on its slender pedestal. . . .
Holding quietly a white crown,
Dropped lightly upon it
From the mysterious sky that holds the Sun and the Moon.

V

I have written these sketches of clocks and a sundial
Waiting in the powerhouse of a great factory. . . .
Where a chair is courteously placed for me
In a bare, lofty room
Between two monstrous whirring engines
Apparently ceaseless.
At first their rush and their crashing roar
Terrified me.
I wanted to scream and to run. . . . gasping. . . .
Now the noise has become rhythmical. . . . awesome. . . .
And I think, queerly, of deep, green caverns
Far under the roar of the ocean.
How slow. . . . slow. . . . slow
The old clocks striking at midnight. . . .

In comparison
With this hurrying, rhythmical beat of these mighty engines,
Timed to the fraction of a second.
High over my head, on a brick wall
A shrill piercing gong strikes now and then rapidly. . . .
Cleaving the roar and the rhythm. . . .
I understand nothing. . . .

Now I shall simply write down, laboriously. . . .
As a child writes. . . .
And very reverently. . . .

GOD
CLOCKS
ENGINES
